Confessions
of a Wife

WOMAN, THE QUEEN BEE.

Poor dear Mollie, she has been dreading having her mother come back to stay with her after the scene with Chad. You may imagine, little book, how glad I was to be able to tell her that Mother Trent had decided to stay at the hotel.

"Well, Mollie, I can't tell you what a relief that was to me," said Mollie when I told her. "And then she said 'Goodbye until tonight.' Chad and I will come over early." I noticed a glad tone in her voice, little book, that I have missed ever since I got back.

When I told the whole thing to Dick at night, he said, "Well, it takes one selfish person to give another just what is coming to him. Most people stand for the selfishness of a person near them because it does not entail as much trouble to let him get away with his silly ideas of what is due him as it does to make him understand that there are other people in the world who have rights as well as he."

Little book, something has made Dick think for himself and for others. One should beware the tyranny of ideas that are not his own. It is not other day. "The tyranny of ideas is worse than the tyranny of things and both these are greater tyrants than any human being could be. They rule in a despotism that is absolute."

"Mother, you know, has an idea that her judgment is always right and so she had no compunction about telling Chad he was all wrong in his obsession with the idea that she was a woman. I don't think she had ever dealt to any other human being before."

I do with an able-bodied husband who refuses to work and who has simply laid down on the job of supporting himself and let me do the work. It is a query that is put to me continually.

There is only one answer. There is only one possible way of solving the problem of the clinging vine man, and that is to let him go. If he has his support and force him to stand alone. The man who is able to work and won't work should be made to work. And it isn't the law that can do that. It's an unpleasant duty that is up to women.

If every woman who has a worthless, lazy husband or son had the courage to say to him "you've got to pay your way or get out," and if she had the strength and firmness to shut and bar the door on him until he made good, the vagrancy question would be settled in ten minutes, and likewise much of the drink and petty gambling questions. Also the foundations would have been laid for making a decent, self-respecting man out of a contemptible panhandler.

As long as the shiftless, self-indulgent boy and man know that they're got somewhere to go when they are out of work, that there's a warm place by the fire, and a good bed and three square meals a day waiting for them for nothing, they give up at the first obstacle, they let any difficulty discourage them, they indulge their tempers in talking back to their bosses, and throw up a job whenever they get tired of it. If, however, these same men knew that their food and lodging and clothes absolutely depended on their sticking to their work, they would stick. When it is a question of work or starve even the laziest choose work.

Therefore, the woman who feeds and clothes a healthy hearty man and abets him in his vagrancy. She is accessory to the crime. Above all she denies him his chance of making a man of himself, for she softens him where she should harden him spiritually.

Of course the woman excuses herself by saying that if I turn my worthless son or husband away from my door and refuse to support him any longer, I am afraid of what would happen to him. I am afraid he might become a drunkard or a tramp. He might sink to the lowest depths.

To this one may reply that the man who grafts his living off the women nearest to him—the women that he is in honor bound to protect, can't possibly sink any lower. He has touched the bottom of degradation of soul, no matter if mother or wife keep his body clothed in fine raiment. And the truth remains unaltered that the only way to make him a man is to force him to do a man's work.

Oh, yes, the loafer can be suppressed but it is the individual woman and not the law that must do the job.

How Fat Actress Was Made Slim

Many stage people now depend entirely upon Marmol Prescription Tablets for reducing and controlling fat. One clever actress tells that she reduced two to four pounds a week by using this new form of the famous Marmol Prescription and now, by taking Marmol Tablets several times a year, keeps her weight just right. All druggists sell Marmol Prescription Tablets at 75 cents for a large case. Or you can get them by sending price direct to the Marmol Co., 84 Woodward Ave., Detroit, Mich. If you have tried them do so. They are harmless and effective.—Adv.
